Your five-minute setup

Print only the pages you plan to use. Black-and-white printing works well.

1 / Gather the basics

Use US Letter paper at actual size (100%). You need pencils, a host, and scissors only if you want separate trivia cards. Print one prediction sheet per player or team, pages 5-8 once, and page 9 for the host.

2 / Make room for everyone

Two or more players can compete, with one person reading questions. For a larger group, form mixed-age teams. Younger children can point, guess, or choose with a reading partner. Keep the answer key out of sight.

3 / Lock predictions before the coin toss

Use page 3 for Bills vs. Patriots or fill in the opponent on page 4. No edits after the opening coin toss. Check halftime scores at halftime, and the rest using the final game statistics. Final scores include overtime.

4 / Run trivia during a break

Choose 10 cards for a short round, or use all 24 in four rounds of six. Read the question and choices. Give everyone 15 seconds, then reveal A, B, or C together by holding up 1, 2, or 3 fingers. Award 1 point per correct answer; no penalties.

5 / Keep the scoring simple

Keep prediction and trivia totals separate: two chances to celebrate! Predictions award the printed points only for an exact match; all other answers score zero. Example: the coin toss (1) plus correct winner (2) earns 3 points. A final-score guess one point off earns zero for that line.

6 / Finish with a laugh

For tied prediction totals, the closest combined final-score guess wins; then the closest Bills final-score guess. If still tied, share the win. Trivia ties share the win. Invite anyone to choose a celebration on page 9, or pass without penalty.
